

5 Sales Email Templates You Can Actually Use

Simple, copy-friendly emails for selling your offer without sounding pushy.

New message

To [First name]

Subject A simpler way to [get the result]

Hi [First name],

I just launched [Your offer]. It helps [Audience] get [Main benefit] without the usual hassle.

See how it works

WELCOME

A good sales email isn't pushy. It's clear.

Most people dread writing sales emails because they picture hype, pressure and a lot of exclamation marks. The best ones are the opposite: simple, honest messages to someone who may genuinely benefit from what you offer.

A GOOD SALES EMAIL HELPS THE READER UNDERSTAND

- 1 What is being offered
- 2 Why it matters
- 3 Why they should care
- 4 What problem it solves
- 5 What to do next

WHO THIS IS FOR

Business owners, freelancers, coaches and creators who sell something and want their emails to sound clear, warm and confident.

HOW TO USE THE TEMPLATES

- 1 Pick the template that matches your goal.
- 2 Replace every [placeholder] with your own details.
- 3 Read it aloud and cut anything that doesn't sound like you.

TEMPLATE 01 OF 05

New Offer Email

USE THIS WHEN

You're launching something new, or introducing an offer your list hasn't seen yet.

SUBJECT LINE IDEAS

- [Your offer] is now open
- A new way to [Desired result]
- I made this for [Audience]

The email

Copy it, then replace the maroon brackets.

● ● ● Subject Introducing [Your offer]

Hi [First name],

If [Customer problem] is getting in the way of [Desired result], this is for you.

I just launched [Your offer]. It helps [Audience] [Main benefit].

Here's what's inside:

- [Key result]

QUICK TIP

Lead with what your reader is dealing with. Your launch matters to you; their problem matters to them.

TEMPLATE 02 OF 05

Problem → Solution Email

USE THIS WHEN

Your reader knows the problem well, but hasn't found a fix they trust.

SUBJECT LINE IDEAS

- Still dealing with [Customer problem]?
- Why [Customer problem] happens
- A simpler way to [Desired result]

The email

Copy it, then replace the maroon brackets.

● ● ● Subject Still dealing with [Customer problem]?

Hi [First name],

Most [Audience] I talk to are tired of [Customer problem]. It eats time, it's frustrating, and the usual fixes don't last.

The reason is usually simple: [Root cause].

That's why I created [Your offer]. It helps you [Main benefit] by [Your method].

If that sounds like what you need, start here: [CTA link]

QUICK TIP

Use your customer's own words. If they say "my emails get ignored," don't write "low engagement."

TEMPLATE 03 OF 05

Benefit-Focused Sales Email

USE THIS WHEN

Your offer is clear, and you want readers to picture life after they say yes.

SUBJECT LINE IDEAS

- What [Main benefit] looks like
- Imagine [Desired result]
- What you'll get with [Your offer]

The email

Copy it, then replace the maroon brackets.

QUICK TIP

End every feature with “so you can...” It turns what your offer is into what it does for them.

TEMPLATE 04 OF 05

Objection-Handling Email

USE THIS WHEN

Readers are interested but hesitating. Price, time and “will this work for me?” are the usual reasons.

SUBJECT LINE IDEAS

- “Is this right for me?”
- Not sure about [Your offer]?
- The honest answer about [Objection]

The email

Copy it, then replace the maroon brackets.

● ● ● Subject Is [Your offer] right for you?

Hi [First name],

A question I hear a lot: “[Biggest objection]”

It’s a fair one. Here’s the honest answer: [Direct answer in one or two sentences].

[Proof: a result, a testimonial or a simple fact]

If that settles it, you can get started here: [CTA link]

Or just reply to this email and ask me anything.

QUICK TIP

Name the doubt before the reader has to. Answer it honestly, then back it up with one piece of proof.

TEMPLATE 05 OF 05

Last-Chance / Reminder Email

USE THIS WHEN

Your offer closes soon and you want one final reminder. Use it only when the deadline is real.

SUBJECT LINE IDEAS

- [Your offer] closes [Deadline]
- Last reminder, [First name]
- Final reminder: [Your offer]

The email

Copy it, then replace the maroon brackets.

● ● ● Subject Last reminder: [Your offer] closes [Deadline]

Hi [First name],

A quick reminder that [Your offer] closes on [Deadline].

After that, [What changes].

If you've been thinking about it, here's what you'll get: [Main benefit].

You can join here before [Deadline]: [CTA link]

And if now isn't the right time, no problem at all. Thanks for reading.

QUICK TIP

Use only real deadlines, and say exactly what changes. A true reason to act doesn't need pressure.

CHECKLIST

Before You Hit Send

Run every email through these eight questions. If you can't say yes to one, that's the line to rework.

☐Is the offer clear?

A stranger should be able to say what you're selling after one read.

☐Does the opening give the reader a reason to care?

Start with their situation, not your announcement.

☐Is the main benefit obvious?

One clear result, stated plainly.

☐Have I addressed the biggest objection?

Name the hesitation before the reader has to.

☐Is there one clear CTA?

One action. One link. No competing options.

☐Does the email sound human?

Read it aloud. If you wouldn't say it, rewrite it.

☐Can I remove unnecessary words?

Cut the warm-up. Shorter is usually clearer.

☐Would I personally want to read this email?

If you'd skim past it, so will they.

GOING FURTHER

Make These Templates Work Harder

A template gives you a starting point.
Strategy decides what goes into it.

The template supplies the structure. Everything inside it comes from what you know about your reader, and these seven things shape every email that gets a response.

Your audience

Who is reading, and what do they already believe?

The problem

What is it costing them, in their own words?

Your offer

What does it change for them, specifically?

The outcome

What does success look like from their side?

The objections

What is quietly stopping them from saying yes?

Awareness level

Do they know they have the problem? Do they know you?

The reason to act now

Why this week, and not “someday”?

Get these seven right and the words come far more easily. That is where professional email copy begins.
